"It's very sad that Rachel has not just been herself," Ruthanne told the newspaper. "Her effectiveness in the causes of the African-American community would have been so much more viable, and she would have been more effective, if she had just been honest with everybody."

The NAACP was forced to address this controversy Friday morning.

"NAACP Spokane Washington Branch President Rachel Dolezal is enduring a legal issue with her family, and we respect her privacy in this matter. One's racial identity is not a qualifying criteria or disqualifying standard for NAACP leadership," the organization said in a statement to ET. "The NAACP Alaska-Oregon-Washington State Conference stands behind Ms. Dolezal's advocacy record. In every corner of this country, the NAACP remains committed to securing political, educational, and economic justice for all people, and we encourage Americans of all stripes to become members and serve as leaders in our organization."

Rachel's ethnicity is also in question by the city of Spokane which is claiming she checked that she was of African-American descent on a city application to be on the Ombudsman commission.

This bizarre story has inevitably made it to Twitter, with the hashtag "#transracial" trending. "Hmm interesting article about #racheldolezal. If she identifies as black, can she be transracial?" one tweet reads.

Actress Mia Farrow posted a similar sentiment, writing: "We accept that a person can identify as transgender. Can 'trans-ethnic' be a real thing?"
